A multicultural conference has convened. Everything is in place, and the participants arrive brimming with goodwill and even better intentions. Surely this time...! But, no. Halfway through the meetings, communication grinds to a halt, and people retreat to the safety of their own groups. What happened? And how can we keep it from happening again? Those are the questions this book proposes to answer.

Eric H. F. Law, an Episcopalian priest, is the founder and executive director of the kaleidoscope Institute, the mission of which is to create inclusive and sustainable churches and communities. For more than 20 years, he has provided transformative and comprehensive training and resources for churches and ministries in all the major church denominations in the United States and Canada. He writes a weekly blog called The Sustainist: Spirituality for Sustainable Communities in a Networked World. Visit his blog at <http://ehflaw.typepad.com/blog/>

Easy and fast read that brings up critical points. At times however it is very opinionated. While I did not agree with everything stated I did find this book to overall to be very worthwhile too read. The main focus throughout the book are very necessary to consider. How do we reach out in groups to people who do not want to speak for themselves.

Got me to think, which is what I usually hope for with such books. I particularly appreciated Eric's understanding and eloquent expression of the differences in how cultures view, respond to, and share power; and how that can greatly affect inter-cultural interactions. This was an approachable and quick read as well as an insightful one. I would recommend it for small groups to read and discuss as a good start for considering culture.

Helpful for facilitating discussions of intercultural groups or strong leaders with untrained listeners. Details of using "mutual invitation" method. How to involve all in non threatening manner.

Considering that Eric has experienced having to adjust to a completely different culture as a teenager, therefore he's talking about first-hand experience. Also, the book is very easy to read because he mostly shares stories and "cases" from his own life, so it is very relatable. For all those who want to find out how to successfully worship and lead people from different cultures so everyone (well, at least the majority) is happy, this is a great book!

It is excellent. A very useful and inspiring tool for those involved in anti-racist work, whether faith based or secular.

very clear and with practical examples, easy to read even for those with English as a second language

Most of us take turns being wolves or lambs in different group settings. How to do this bloodlessly, even peacefully is Law's aim in life. His audience is Christian churches in our multicultural world.

This is a wonderful resource for anyone looking to grow in their understanding of cultural differences. Law's explanation of high and low power distance within cultures has been most helpful.
