Years Of Hope: Cambridge, Colonial Administrator In The South Seas, And Cricket

Synopsis

After Cambridge, in 1938, Philip Snow left the first-class cricket field and sailed halfway around the world to pursue a Colonial Service career. His work in Fiji could hardly have been more varied: Commissioner, Magistrate, Officer-in-Charge-of-Police, Superintendent of Gaols, Receiver of Wrecks and Colonial Secretary. He was joined by his fiancée, just before the exotic setting was shattered by the Pacific War. After Pearl Harbor and the fall of Singapore, Fiji was virtually surrounded by the Japanese. Philip Snow was Government Liaison Officer during this critical period. The presence of C.P. Snow, his elder brother, exerted a powerful influence on Philip's life during this time. This is a record of the flavour of British experience in the colonies. Overshadowing all is the theme of racial harmony, mutual tolerance and distant respect which informed Snow's life.

Customer Reviews

Snow writes with personal experience of those who led Fiji prior to, and through, the war years and who set the scene for independence. His commentary on the personalities he met and of the life of a Colonial officer in those days is well drawn. I was a teenager when Fiji gained independence and this book provides an insight into why, and how, that event occurred. I found it very interesting.
