Curt Lader is a former AP Government and Politics teacher at Northport High School (located in Suffolk County in New York; a frequent guest lecturer at law related conferences; and a teacher of the class "Inside Politics" at the CW Post Hutton House lecture series. Curt holds Graduate degrees from Queens College and St. John's University, and he lives in Smithtown, NY.

The cards were super helpful and informative. I love that they are broken down by topic. Each individual card is rather lengthy so it takes some time to get through even small sections but the review is definitely helpful for the exam. There were some large chunks of cards that were not necessary for AP exam review (the domestic and foreign policies of all the presidents over the last 50 or so years, etc) but I feel they will come in handy in studying for college level government and political science courses. The cards are also numbered and have a table of contents, which is amazingly helpful. They are also hole punched in the corner and come with a metal flip ring that can hold a chunk of cards at a time for easier transportation of a subject or so at a time. I would definitely recommend these cards. I would suggest getting them at the beginning of the year and using them to study for tests as you go, pulling out the extraneous cards along the way so that by the time the exam rolls around, you are familiar with the cards and have the ones you really need to know pulled out.

My daughter took the U.S. Government class as a junior and decided to try her luck on the AP test. She only got a 2. She felt she'd done well on the government portion but knew little about the politics questions that were asked. Senior year, we convinced her to try the AP test again. She was fearful, as it had been a year since she'd taken the test and she hadn't done well. We bought her these cards and said, "Study these hard for a week and let's just see how you do." She did and ended up scoring a 3, earning her college credit. She liked the fact that she could remove the flash cards from the ring. As her week of study progressed, she removed the card for those topic areas she had mastered. I highly recommend this for those who need review or who might be taking the test for the first time. They really helped my daughter!

These are not flashcards in the traditional sense. The cards just have facts written on them. There should be a "two-sided" format of question on one side and answer on the other. Oh well. I guess it is better than nothing.

I'm not going to leave a bad rating since these cards are really well made and are probably useful for the AP exam (obviously), but anyone looking to buy these for the CLEP exam shouldn't bother. These cards suck for CLEP prep. I went through a lot of them and they tend to focus on a lot of modern politics (ex: 2004 party platforms, Bush foreign policy). They do not seem to focus much on amendments/court cases/general procedure. Buy something else if you plan on studying for the CLEP exam. Sent back to for a refund.

So my son loves these cards. We bought them after he bombed his first test.. Doing poorly on a test is not typical of him. His teacher does test using AP standards and likeness of questions. So after the first test we decided to take some action and see what is out there to help him. I came across the study guide and these cards. He likes the cards a lot because you can just grab and use the ring to have the current chapters on hand. So from his first bombed test to getting the 3rd highest score on the next test, these have been great in the day to day studying and I'm sure will help in the long run for the ap tests in May.

Can't beat these for general standardized tests that require basic knowledge of our Government and Political system. Used for prep for the Foreign Service Exam.

I loved how organized these cards were. They review specific vocabulary that will definitely be on the exam! The only thing I disliked was the fact that they did not go in to greater detail with some concepts that seem to be heavily weighted in the exam. I would recommend them for us in studying with groups, because they are great to get your mind rolling, but a Barron's AP Gov. book would work better for individual studying.

Was helpful in studying for the AP test. Had a little too much info that made it hard to summarize everything.
