Customer Reviews

Too bad does not support publishing history.

The book is cool and full of helpful facts. I think it would be better if it had color.

Poorly written, hard to follow, many misspelled words and typos. Gave it an extra star, had nice pictures.

I liked the facts. Made me realize that the confederate flag everyone is up in the air about, isn't the flag they think!!! Now, when I got to pg 25 of 27, I did not have the other two pages. Now the book shows I only completed 98%! Oh well. Enjoyed it. Thanks to the author, I can now stand some ground!

History essentials for lovers of the South. Concise. These are facts I never knew even though my great-great grandfather fought for the South. Thank you!

No matter how innocent the origin and intent of an object/thing may be, it can quickly and easily become tainted and known as something else entirely, depending on the intent of the men who used it, and how they and countless others as a result, chose to use & redefine it. In other words, over time and due to the cumulative effects of history, a seemingly innocent object can become a symbol for all the atrocities that occurred through the indomitable wills of the men wielding it. It's wise to know the origin of a thing, but it doesn't change the facts about the atrocities committed by the men surrounding it; moreover, Facts should NEVER be cherry picked and sought out as a means to fill in or vindicate our own beliefs or desire to find a more palatable narrative. We can know the origins and still respect the effect it has to this day on thousands of Americans from both sides.

Just the facts are clearly laid out and presented in a quick read. But then Who cares about facts these days much less our national history... Well I do and I was happy to devour these 50 facts. They are clear, to the point and informative. You will never find this in an academic library as it is so truthfully politically incorrect, although factual. Professors beware as the truth may be subdued but never kept prisoner. This is the tale based on truth and truth will always win out in the end.
