Gary L. McIntosh is associate professor at Talbot School of Theology and director of their D.Min. program. He has led seminars for churches and church organizations across the country and has written four books, including Three Generations: Riding the Waves of Change in Your Church and Make Room for the Boom . . . Or Bust. Samuel D. Rima Sr., is the senior pastor of Bethany Baptist Church in Omaha, Nebraska.

This kind of insight is crucial for any leader. Everyone has something in them that is "dark" and unwieldy. It's simply a part of being human. Too often, however, we want to gloss over our weaknesses and inner struggles. All the while, they are having negative effect on our relationships both professionally and personally. Candidly examining and dealing with the dark sides of our personalities make us much better leaders, parents, spouses, employees, team members, etc. This book provides the necessary encouragement to do just that.

This book will challenge you as a leader to identify your weaknesses, and gives you a clear path forward on how to manage that

I've reviewed many books here, and seldom do I say that one is a must-read for every pastor. This title however, falls into that category. Not only is it of enormous benefit to pastors, but it will be very helpful in granting insight to others who want to understand better the enormous challenges we face and the dark side we all possess. For pastors, this book is eye-opening in asserting that all of us must deal with a dark side in one form or another. For people supportive of us, this volume takes us off any super-human pedestal (we never really belonged there in the first place). It does so by providing insight into our very unique humanity that we too often deny. This book is the first of its kind, and hopefully not the last. It is well worth the small investment required to purchase and the short time required to read.

The subject matter of this book makes it worth reading though the quality of the writing leaves much to be desired. I think this is a subject that anyone who is a Christian and doing any kind of service would benefit from to address some of the things that have brought great shame to the name of Christ due to behaviors inconsistent with a walk in Christ Jesus.

Good read , not only for people in ministry but also for those who work in big corporations.
